

- A. Mondo Condos These condos line the road, overwhelming the few remaining beach cottages. Some condos are funky with great art, flowers and other beachy decorations.
- B. Duwamish Head There are incredible views from this point. A tiny outcropping of a park marks the site of Luna Park, an amusement center built in 1907. You can see the remnants at very low tide.
- C. The Space Needle This tower is a major symbol of Seattle. Located at the Seattle Center, it was built for the 1962 World's Fair. The Space Needle is 605 feet high, 138 feet wide, and weighs 9,550 tons. It was built to withstand winds of up to 200 mph and earthquakes of up to 9.1 magnitude.
- D. Don Armeni Park Here you have an excellent view of the Port of Seattle, spectacular views of Puget Sound, and Elliott Bay is also visible here.
- E. Ferries of Seattle Created June 1, 1951 and is the largest ferry system in the U.S. and third largest in the world. It carries nearly 23 million riders per year. The fleet consists of 20 auto-passenger ferries, and 2 passenger-only ferries. It operates 20 terminals on 9 routes making 450 trips a day.
- F. Seacrest Marina and Elliott Bay Water Taxi Nice dock for anglers; be sure you know what's legal to catch! Teens and adults need fishing licenses; kids don't. Catch the foot ferry to downtown Seattle's Pier 54.
- G. Jack Block Park This 15-acre park situated on the northwest corner of the Port of Seattle's Terminal 5, was previously occupied by a wood treatment plant and a shipbuilding facility. The park opened in 1998 as part of the Port of Seattle's redevelopment of Terminal 5 and was dedicated and named after former Port Commissioner Jack Block in 2001.
- H. Terminal 5 Park This park was built by the Port of Seattle, and kids like the marine-theme play area. Follow the path over the little hill to the big pier. Climb to a high but safe viewing platform to see much of Seattle's waterfront, Harbor Island freight yards and ships.
- I. Alki Beach Park Alki Beach Park is a 135.9-acre park and has a 0.5 miles of beachfront. It was the first public salt-water bathing beach on the west coast of the United States.
- J. Seattle Birthplace Monument This monument is a tribute to the settlers who landed at Alki in 1851. Nearby there is also a human size model of New York's famous greeter, the Statue of Liberty.
- K. Alki Point Lighthouse One of 13 along the shores of Puget Sound. The Coast Guard maintains this nowautomated 1913 icon. The tower is open on summer weekend afternoons.
- L. Charles Richey Viewpoint This viewpoint looks southwest across Puget Sound, taking in Bainbridge Island, Blake Island, Vashon Island, the Kitsap Peninsula, and the Olympic Mountains.
- M. Constellation Beach Park and Marine Reserve Beaches with beach critters, tide pools and driftwood. Check out the 3-foot bronze octopus in the sculpted "tide pool". Walk down the steps to a tile mural with images of fish, clams and mussels.
- N. Weather Watch Park This tiny (135 ft long!) park was completed in 1991, and has artwork that is so fun to look at that it competes with the glorious view the spot affords of Puget Sound and the Olympic Mountains.
- O. Emma Schmitz Memorial Overlook One of Seattle's stunning viewpoints, this area was donated by Emma Schmitz in 1945. There is a rocky beach that is accessible during low tide. The tidepools are rich in limpets, lumpsuckers, blennies, chitons, nudibranches, sea stars, sea slugs, sea cucumbers, and an array of other tidepool dwellers.

- P. Me-Kwa-Mooks Park Most of the park stretches up the hillside. The dense trees provide habitat for many birds, including screech owls. Me-Kwa- Mooks, meaning "shaped like a bear's head" in the Nisqually dialect, is what the Duwamish tribe called the West Seattle peninsula when the first European-American settlers landed at Alki in 1851.
- Q. Lincoln Park Lincoln Park was called Fauntleroy Park until 1922, when the city bought it. The popularity of the name Fauntleroy in this area springs from the passions of Lieutenant George Davidson, who was taking soundings off the bluff in 1857.
